ABSTRACT

This book has been compiled to provide media specialists and teachers with an annotated list of historical fiction tradebooks categorized by American historical periods and grade-level groupings. The book has been divided into two parts. Part 1 is the list of historical fiction book titles and is subdivided into nine chronological historical periods, starting with the Colonial period prior to 1763 and going up to 1980. Part 2 is an annotated booklist containing bibliographic information and annotations for 340 books. (MS)

Preface

Purpose

Making Connections: A Selected List of Historical Fiction K-12 was compiled to provide MCPS media specialists and teachers with an annotated list of historical fiction tradebooks categorized by American historical periods and grade-level groupings. The use of historical fiction books in the classroom or as self-selected reading material can contribute to the students' understanding of historical events and their effects on society.

Selection

Although a great effort was made to locate historical fiction books for all grade levels in each American historical period, the search was not equally successful. Some historical periods may not contain books for each of the four grade-level groupings. For example, the historical period labeled "Civil War" has no books listed for kindergarten. Also, some grade levels will have more books listed for a particular historical period than other grade levels. For example, the historical period labeled "Frontier and Slavery" has 22 books listed for Grades 4-6 and only 9 books listed for Grades K-3. Similarly, a specific grade level may have more books listed in a particular historical period as compared with another period. For example, Grade Level 7-9 has 16 books listed for "Farming and Industry" but only 4 for "World War I." These imbalances are due to a combination of factors including the limitations of available sources, the ability of students to read at various grade levels, the developmental ability of various grade levels to understand historical concepts, and the emphasis of American history curriculum at certain grade levels.

Therefore, the books selected are not intended to be all inclusive. They represent only those books that are recommended by a variety of available sources, such as reference books, professional journal articles, and ERIC documents.

Format

Making Connections: A Selected List of Historical Fiction K-12 has two major parts. Part I is a listing of historical fiction book titles by grade-level groupings within each historical time period. Part II is an annotated booklist containing bibliographic information and an annotation for each book. The key that connects the two parts is the book number that precedes each book's title.

Approval

Every book listed has been evaluated by MCPS and is approved for use in the classroom. This approval is noted in Part II, where each book's publication information is noted. The approval will be indicated in one of three ways: either with a BATAB number, or with A(OFL) representing approval in the official file list, or with A(EF) representing approval in the evaluation file.

Historical Periods

One of the purposes of this publication was to select books that could add to the students' understanding of American history. Therefore, several American history tradebooks and textbooks and all of MCPS' "Social Studies Curriculum Guides" were surveyed to determine units of study and major historical periods/events. This knowledge was used to divide America's history into chronological time periods. Each time period was then labeled with a significant historical event or era that occurred during that time period. These historical time periods are listed in the Contents and used throughout Part I.

The periods were then used to locate each book's appropriate place in American history. Placement in a time period indicates when the book's action takes place and does not necessarily mean that the book is about the period's event. For example, the book Yellow Fur and Little Hawk is not about World War I, even though it is listed in that historical period. However, the story does take place in 1915, which is within the time period that is labeled World War I (1910-1920). Therefore, a book's placement in a historical period is based on when its action occurred and not on the time period's event.

In surveying the MCPS curriculum guides, several groups of people appeared as topics of study across all grade levels. This may be due, in part, to the fact that these people have national weeks or months of observance and because these people have made significant contributions throughout America's history. These groups of people are blacks, American Indians, and women. Therefore, any book that has one of these groups as a significant character has a symbol to indicate this information. The symbols are B = blacks, I = American Indians, and W = women. They will be found directly after the book number that precedes the book's title. For example:

13-W An Army in Pigtails. Evatt, Harriet.

means that the book, An Army in Pigtails, by Harriet Evatt is the thirteenth book in the annotated booklist and has a woman (W) as a major character.

It was also noted that the study of Maryland is a major unit in the MCPS social studies curriculum. Therefore, books whose setting takes place in Maryland are similarly designated with an "M" after the book number.

Grade Level

Since the books were selected from a variety of sources, there was little agreement or use of a universal system to determine a book's appropriate grade level. Some sources used reading levels and others used interest levels. So for the purpose of guidance only, the following grade-level groupings were used: K-3, 4-6, 7-9, and 10-12. Each book was assigned to one of these grade-level groups based on a consensus of the sources stated grade levels. For example, if one source recommended a book for 3-6 grade students and another source suggested 5-7 students, then the book was placed in the 4-6 grade-level group. Therefore, it is important to use the stated grade levels for guidance only. It is highly suggested that books from adjacent grade-level groups be considered, especially when seeking books for reluctant readers, gifted readers, or for the purpose of selecting a read-aloud book.

Part I

Part I is subdivided into nine chronological historical periods. At the beginning of each time period, there is a timeline page that represents that historical period. The timelines are intended to add to the historical perspective of the books listed in that period.

Each historical period is further subdivided into the four grade-level groupings (K-3, 4-6, 7-9, and 10-12). The historical fiction books are then listed under the appropriate grade level for that historical period. For example, in the historical period labeled "Civil War" under grade level 7-9, the book Winter of the Wolf is listed.

A typical citation in Part I looks like the following:

330-I Winter of the Wolf . . . G. Clifton Wisler.

The number "330" is the book number and is used to locate the book in Part II of the annotated booklist. The "I" indicates that an Indian(s) is a major character(s) in the book called Winter of the Wolf written by G. Clifton Wisler.

Part II

Part II, the annotated booklist, contains the bibliographic information and an annotation for each book listed in Part I. A specific book title in Part I can be located in Part II by its book number or its title, because the citations in Part II are listed in numerical order by book number and in alphabetical order by book title.

Each entry in Part II begins like its citation in Part I with the book number, a symbol code (if appropriate), the book's title, and its author(s). This is followed by the publication information. For example, the book The Secret Annie Oakley has the following publication information:

New American Library, 1983 $14.95, BATAB 453004377.

It includes the publishing company, the most recent copyright date, the book's current price, and its BATAB number indicating its approval. If the book is published in more than one format, a second statement of publication appears under the first one. Additional information may appear in parentheses after the copyright date. For a book that is published in a format other than hard copy, the publication information is marked with a "pb" designating paperback or with a "plb" designating publisher's library binding. The parentheses may also include "op." This indicates that the book in that format is currently out of print. Books that are out of print were kept in the annotated booklist despite the fact that they are not currently being published, because they may still be available in school media centers and public libraries. All publication information is based on MCPS' most recent evaluation sources and on the CD-ROM Fall 1988 Books in Print w/Book Reviews Plus.

The publication information is followed by the historical period (HST) and the grade-level group (GRL) that the book is listed under in Part I.

Each citation ends with a brief annotation based on annotations and reviews found in the sources. The annotation states the plot or subject of the book. It does not comment as to the quality, value, or factuality of the book. However, every book has been reviewed as recommended or highly recommended by MCPS' evaluation procedures and is, therefore, considered a book with merit. It is hoped that you will find this instructional resource both useful and easy to use.
